"And there were no Injuns?" "No." "And no grizzly?"

"No."

"Not even a rattlesnake?"

"No. It was simply the fall of a picture and a broken nose. I called in the butler, the footman and a housemaid, and the debris was soon cleared ed away."

"And you - you" - stammered the man who had been waiting to thrill.

"Nothing more, except that a carload The owner had to pay damages which of tapestries and foreign bric-a-brac amounted to the cost of several arrived an hour later, and a few friends came in to sample some French wine at $7 per bottle. of late?" persisted the questioner. "Why, I don't know that you'd call it thrilling exactly. I sat in my library a few evenings ago reading Shakespeare, while my wife was playing on the piano in the parlor and my little daughter was in the conservatory gathering hothouse roses. All at once

"No." "And no grizzly?"

"No."

"Not even a rattlesnake?" "No. It was simply the fall of a picture and a broken nose. I called in the butler, the footman and a housemaid, and the debris was soon cleared ed away."

"And you - you" - stammered the man who had been waiting to thrill.

"Nothing more, except that a carload of tapestries and foreign bric-a-brac arrived an hour later, and a few friends came in to sample some French wine at $7 per bottle. Yes, things are pretty wild out our way, but we manage to pull along somehow." M. QUAD

Commissioner-EDEN REEDER.

Senator Depew talks a good deal. A man cannot talk all the time without sometimes talking nonsense. The senator's prediction that President Mc-Kinley will be elected to a third term is not a reasonable one. Not that the president could not be re-elected if nominated, or that he could not be renominated, if he wanted to be; but because he is not the man to think of setting aside a precedent which has never been violated since the foundation of the republic. President Mc-Kinley has filled his noble office with distinguished honor, and the nation will regret to see him leave it. But we imagine he has had his full share of the cares of state and that no amount of entreaty could persuade him to promise to enter upon the duties of chief executive for another period of four years.

Opinions And Observations of Interest

If plans which have been suggested to President Nice, of the city council, are carried out-and there is good reason to believe they will-the dog nuisance, which has so long been complained of by the citizens of East Liverpool, will soon be abated. The new scheme which has been unfolded to Mr. Nice is to induce council at the To the Voice of East Liverpool next meeting of that body to provide cises of the class of 1901, in the First legislation whereby the office of dog catcher will be created.

> This idea has been talked over for several days by the authorities at the city hall and has met with unanimous approval. Of course, it remains for council to carry out the plan and to make the appointment of the man

According to the plans which have already been outlined it will be the duty of Mr. Aufderheide, when once who are holding a "mothers' conven- This, to many people, would be a sign he is inducted into office, to begin an of ill-luck, but to the boys and girls immediate onslaught on all the canine of '01 it is only another obstacle to be brutes running at large. > What is vexing the prospective dog catcher most is the mode of execution of the brutes. He doesn't favor shooting them and will not listen to the proposition of poisoning. It has been suggested that he use a bludgeon and beat their brains out, but this he also objects to. The transactions would probably never have come to light had the fellow been satisfied to confine his 'con" game to a few, but recently he has become so bold, and worked the thing with such persistence that no less than eight drummers have been bitten, or more properly speaking, have been compelled to bite. The result of this has been that several of the salesmen have compared notes and found that a number of them have been victimized. The story, as told by the latest victim, is in substance as follows:

> "You see, it is always customary for a salesman to get acquainted with all the employes of a store, and this particular individual has profited to a -considerable extent by reason of the fact.

"The other day, while showing my line at the store, I was approached by the man and asked if I did not want to purchase a recipe for making a particularly fine variety of sweet cakes. He said it was the sort his mother used to make and he knew they were all right.

"I had about as much use for a cake receipt as I had for a threshing machine, and told him so. He said I'd better buy, as he could do me lots of good with the firm. I still insisted that I did not want it, and he finally informed me that unless I paid $1 for the thing he would 'plug' against me with the proprietors of the firm. Of course I bought it. It wasn't business to do anything else. I learned afterward that it was an old trick, and that traveling men had been forced to buy all sorts of stuff from a patent mouse trap to a patent bed bug exterminator."

Perhaps one of the queerest bets ever made in this city was made by Nick Flesch and Thomas Harley, two well known potters last Saturday week. Flesch had purchased a pair of socks for 25 cents and Harley bet him 50 cents that they would be full of holes inside of a week provided he wore them all the time. The wager was taken and on Friday night while they were at Turner hall it was discovered that there were holes in the socks, and the judge, Ed Morgan, decided the bet in Harley's favor, but Flesch refuses to pay up, as he claims there were no holes in his socks.

The fact of such an account being published of one living in almost the same place had a tendency to convince me that there must be some truth in it, and I determined to try them myself. Some years before this I had a severe attack of rheumatism; for three months I lay helpless and after that I had trouble with my kidneys. For a year I suffered severely. My back was so bad that it felt as if I had a boil where the kidneys are. I could not bend, lean back against a chair or reach up. I could not lie on my back, and about every move I made caused pain. I had taken numerous remedies, but none brought the desired relief. Well, Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the W. & W. pharmacy, did what no other remedy was able to do. I took them regularly for a short time and found them all the Pittsburg paper stated them to be. I can heartily recommend them. After using them I was rid of backaches and other symptoms of kidney trouble."

If plans which have been suggested to President Nice, of the city council. are carried out-and there is good reason to believe they will-the dog nuisance, which has so long been complained of by the citizens of East Liverpool, will soon be abated. The new scheme which has been unfolded to Mr. Nice is to induce council at the To the Voice of East Liverpool next meeting of that body to provide legislation whereby the office of dog catcher will be created.

This idea has been talked over for several days by the authorities at the city hall and has met with unanimous approval. I had taken numerous remedies, but none brought the desired relief. Well, Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the W. & W. pharmacy, did what no other remedy was able to do. He thinks it means a significant revival of interest that so many men should be bidding for the party nomination this fall. Mr. McLean is most interested at this time in the platform to be adopted, and expressed himself as being unalterably opposed to the injection into the new platform of any "isms' or "asms." President Desires the Powers' Demands Moderated.

Our Already Moderate Caim to Be Cut One-half, if Other Nations Will Agree-Not Accepted, but England Disposed to Be Considerate.

San Francisco, May 23.-President McKinley and Secretary of State Hay have been in communication with Washington during their journey west. Dispatches from foreign embassies have been arriving and the Chinese situation has received special attention. The president has been anxious lest the difficulties thrown in the way of an arrangement by the demands of some of the powers might lead to indefinite delay and a consequent increase of the indemnity to be exacted. The points to be settled are, first, the total amount of the indemnity and the share of each power; second, the method of payment

In regard to the first point the president has constantly endeavored to moderate the demands of the powers to an amount which China might pay without financial ruin or territorial dismemberment. He has thought that $200,000,000 was the maximum amount indicated by the best authorities consulted, and he has proved the willingness of this government to make every sacrifice in the interest of the integrity of China and the restoration of normal relations, by cutting down our already moderate claim one half if other powers would make proportionate reduction. These propositions have not been accepted by the other governments, though Great Britain has shown a disposition to a considerate treatment of the matter.

MOVEMENT IN ERIE

It Saved Stock Market From Semi-Stagnation-Some of the Market Features.

New York May 23 .- The stock market fell still further into apathy Wednesday and was only relieved from semi-stagnation by the movement in the Erie stocks. The professional traders, at a loss to secure even a fractional profit on a turn in the market, flocked to the Erie crowd as the movement progressed and added their speculative operations to the other buying of the stock. The opinion, however, gained force on the exchange that the movement marked a resumption of operations for the extension of influence and control of ex isting railroad systems. Our Already Moderate Caim to Be Cut One-half, if Other Nations Will Agree-Not Accepted, but England Disposed to Be Considerate.

San Francisco, May 23 .- President McKinley and Secretary of State Hay have been in communication with Washington during their journey west. Dispatches from foreign embassies have been arriving and the Chinese situation has received spe cial attention. The president has been anxious lest the difficulties thrown in the way of an arrangement by the demands of some of the pow ers might lead to indefinite delay and a consequent increase of the indemnity to be exacted. The points to be settled are, first, the total amount of the indemnity and the share of each power; second, the method of payment. In regard to the first point the president has constantly endeavored to moderate the demands of the powers to an amount which China might pay without financial ruin or territorial dismemberment. He has thought that $200,000,000 was the maximum amount indicated by the best authorities consulted, and he has proved the willingness of this government to make every sacrifice in the interest of the integrity of China and the restoration of normal relations, by cutting down our already moderate claim one half if other powers would make proportionate reduction. An Easter Story By WILL'S B. HAWKINS.

Copyright, 1900, by W. B. Hawkins. # # # # # # #

John Haddon sat with his face between his hands, looking into the dying fire through a ragged wound in the side of his rusty stove. A chill wind wailed dismally over the top of the crumbling chimney. A loose clapboard rapped against the side of the house with a hollow, uncanny night sound. The desolation of his surroundings harmonized with John's mood, so that when a swaying tree grated against the eaves soul it almost pleased him.

told of a coming storm. John stepped to the window and peered out. Heavy clouds were rushing across the face of the wasting moon. The wind hissed over the jagged edge of a broken pane and a few great drops were blown against the glass. Then as a quivering flare of lightning gilded the slender white spire of the little church across the way John uttered a grunt of disgust and returned to his seat by the stove, for whatever stood for Christianity was a thorn in his flesh.

John Haddon was not an unlearned man. In his boyhood his sternly pious parents had fondly hoped that he might some day be a great preacher of the gospel to which their faith was riveted. Accordingly they had held him firmly to the strictest discipline of the church and had provided him with such knowledge as seemed necessary to a successful pulpit career. But when death had removed these directing hands John had turned from the passage through the several degrees of sociability, conviviality and debauchery had been marked by an ever increasing hatred of the religion with which his boyhood had been gorged. At the tayern where he and his cronies passed most of their time the mere mention of religion was enough to draw from him a violent storm of abuse of the church and all professing believers. So intent was he on exposing what he called the narrow bigotry of the Christians that he never even thought of concealing his own.

On this Saturday night the choir, which had been augmented by many children's voices for the morrow's Easter service, was having its last rehearsal in the little church. Now and then the swelling volume of the chorus reached John's ear.

mind went off on its favorite theme. Bigoted as he was, it delighted him to think that the Christian religion was absurd; that it contained all the impossibilities of other religions and many more besides; that its founder creatures, and that its Scriptures fell to ashes of fiction whenever the light of reason was turned on them.

As he sat by his stove nursing these hateful thoughts the doors of the church were opened and a flock of children stood in the light, looking out in dismay on the driving storm. At sight of this John grinned-the same misanthropic grin that had darkened his face when lightning the summer before had torn the steeple of the church and spared his own house across the way-"the house of the wicked heretic," as he significantly called it. How long he sat thus gloating over the discomfiture of the storm's prisoners he could not have told. A sense of frowsiness came over him, and he sprawled back in the comfortable old rocker which had been his mother's favorite chair. Then the familiar air of "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," came floating to him from the church, and as his thought faded, faded into dreams, he tried in his mind to keep time to the melody with the sacrilegious words of a pothouse parody.

The storm had ceased. The wind had sung itself to sleep. The little church stood silent in the darkness, its shadowy spire pointing heavenward like a ghostly finger. The last smoldering ember in the stove burst into lurid, doubtful life, cast a wan ray across the sleeping man's dark face, then gasped and died. John Haddon dreamed.

He thought he was a boy again, sitting in the hot, high back pew beside his mother. The preacher, in his stiff with a groan like that of a tormented | white stock, stood canting in the pulpit. John looked at a spider working-A faint flickering in the west and actually working on the Lord's day-in the gruff rumbling of distant thunder a corner of the window, and his mother shook him by the arm, bidding him keep his eyes on the preacher. Then came the prayer, and John must kneel upon the hard, bare floor and bow his head and close his eyes and think of what the preacher said when not a word of it meant anything to him.

As he knelt there a hand was gently laid upon his head, and, turning, he beheld a man standing beside him. His mother's eyes were closed in prayer. She did not see the man.

"You don't like this kind of thing, do you?" the man whispered in his ear. John shook his head for reply.

"Let us go away from here, then," said the man. "I can't," John whispered. "Ma won't

"Oh, I think she will!" The man

spoke softly in the mother's ear. "Nothing could please me more," John heard her say.

The man took him by the hand and led him from the pew. They did not church to the groggery, and his rapid leave the church, but by one of those miracles which dreams perform John found himself seated beside the man upon the cool, grassy bank of a beautiful stream. Flowers nodded to the passing waters and flung their fragrance to the romping breezes. The whole world seemed full

"If you were a preacher, I would be glad to go to church every Sunday," said John, nestling closer to the man.

"I am a preacher." "Where is your church?"

"I have no church. I preach in the woods, in the streets, wherever I happen to be. I am preaching now to you."

"I like you," said John, looking up at him with the charming candor of honest boyhood. "My folks want to make a preacher of me, but they teach me only out of dull books. Do you anow catechisms?"

"No." "You don't! The book of faith?"

"I never heard of it." John was amazed. "What is your denomination?" he asked.

"I have none." "But you believe in the Bible, don't you?"

"I don't know. I never saw it."

"Haven't you any doctrine at all?" "Oh, yes," the man answered. "I reach the doctrine of love and charity and forgiveness and hope. I tell people to hate sin and love the sinner. I try to make them see the glory of God in his wondrous works."

Suddenly the dream scene shifted. John Haddon seemed to be a man seated in the tavern, drinking and singing ribald songs with his cronies. In the midst of the revel a soiled and weary looking traveler entered and, passing quietly behind John's chair, stooped and kissed him on the cheek. With an oath John sprang to his feet and struck the stranger.

"Am I so soon forgotten?" the man asked sadly, though with no resent-

Through fumes of liquor and clouds of tobacco smoke which dimmed his brain and vision John vaguely recognized the traveler as the man with whom, ages and ages before, he had sat upon the grassy bank. Before he could speak the apology which trembled on his lips one of his cronies dashed the contents of a glass in the stranger's face. John raised a chair above his head.

"This is my friend," he cried, "and I will brain the man who insults him!" "Peace, peace!" said the stranger quietly. "These, too, are my friends.

We are all brothers.' In shame John Haddon sank to his knees and buried his face in the folds of the traveler's dusty robe. "Come!" The man raised John. "I have a great pleasure for you-and for you and you," he added, turning to the Silently he led them down a dirty alley and up a tottering stairway to a miserable room where, on a pile of stained straw, a woman lay, pale and gaunt, with a starving babe vainly seeking life upon her wasted breast. The cronies looked at one another as if to ask what pleasure any one could find in such a place. The stranger knelt beside the dying woman.

"Brothers," said he, "here is our sister starving amid plenty."

"Not for me," the woman feebly moaned, "not for me, but for my little one. Oh, pity, gentlemen, pity! Give my baby life and let me die in peace."

"See," said the stranger, "here is our pleasure, my brothers." The cronies stood in tears about the bed of straw. "What shall we do?" they asked.

"Do what you will. Do what will give you all the greatest pleasure."

And every one of them ran out, soon to return with food and raiment for the woman and her babe.

An Easter Story By WILLIS B. HAWKINS. Copyright, 1900, by W. B. Hawkins.

John Haddon sat with his face between his hands, looking into the dying fire through a ragged wound in the side of his rusty stove. A chill wind wailed dismally over the top of the crumbling chimney. A loose clapboard rapped against the side of the house with a hollow, uncanny night sound. The desolation of his surroundings harmonized with John's mood, so that when a swaying tree grated against the eaves with a groan like that of a tormented soul it almost pleased him.

told of a coming storm. John stepped clouds were rushing across the face of the wasting moon. The wind hissed over the jagged edge of a broken pane and a few great drops were blown against the glass. Then as a quivering flare of lightning gilded the slender white spire of the little church across the way John uttered a grunt of disgust and returned to his seat by the stove, for whatever stood for Christianity was a thorn in his flesh.

John Haddon was not an unlearned man. In his boyhood his sternly pious parents had fondly hoped that he might some day be a great preacher of the gospel to which their faith was riveted. Accordingly they had held him let me." firmly to the strictest discipline of the church and had provided him with such knowledge as seemed necessary to a successful pulpit career. But when death had removed these directing hands John had turned from the church to the groggery, and his rapid passage through the several degrees of sociability, conviviality and debauchery had been marked by an ever increasing hatred of the religion with which his boyhood had been gorged. At the tavern where he and his cronies passed most of their time the mere mention of religion was enough to draw from him a violent storm of abuse of the church and all professing believers. So intent was he on exposing what he called the narrow bigotry of gladness. of the Christians that he never even thought of concealing his own.

On this Saturday night the choir, which had been augmented by many children's voices for the morrow's Easter service, was having its last rehearsal in the little church. Now and then the swelling volume of the chorus reached John's ear.

"Nonsense!" he muttered, and his mind went off on its favorite theme. Bigoted as he was, it delighted him to think that the Christian religion was absurd; that it contained all the impossibilities of other religions and many more besides; that its founder was the most fabulous of all fabled creatures, and that its Scriptures fell to ashes of fiction whenever the light of reason was turned on them.

As he sat by his stove nursing these hateful thoughts the doors of the church were opened and a flock of children stood in the light, looking out in dismay on the driving storm. At sight of this John grinned-the same misanthropic grin that had darkened his face when lightning the summer before had torn the steeple of the church and spared his own house across the way-"the house of the wicked heretic," as he significantly called it.

How long he sat thus gloating over the discomfiture of the storm's prisoners he could not have told. A sense of frowsiness came over him, and he sprawled back in the comfortable old rocker which had been his mother's favorite chair. Then the familiar air of "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," came floating to him from the church, and as his thought faded, faded into dreams, he tried in his mind to keep time to the melody with the sacrilegious words of a pothouse parody.

The storm had ceased. The wind had sung itself to sleep. The little church stood silent in the darkness, its shadowy spire pointing heavenward like a ghostly finger. The last smoldering ember in the stove burst into lurid, doubtful life, cast a wan ray across the sleeping man's dark face, then gasped and died. John Haddon dreamed.

He thought he was a boy again, sitting in the hot, high back pew beside his mother. The preacher, in his stiff white stock, stood canting in the pulpit. John looked at a spider working-A faint flickering in the west and actually working on the Lord's day-in the gruff rumbling of distant thunder a corner of the window, and his mother shook him by the arm, bidding him to the window and peered out. Heavy keep his eyes on the preacher. Then came the prayer, and John must kneel upon the hard, bare floor and bow his head and close his eyes and think of what the preacher said when not a word of it meant anything to him.

As he knelt there a hand was gently laid upon his head, and, turning, he beheld a man standing beside him. His mother's eyes were closed in prayer. "Not for me," the woman feebly mother's eyes were closed in prayer. She did not see the man. "You don't like this kind of thing, do you?" the man whispered in his ear. John shook his head for reply. "Let us go away from here, then," said the man. "I can't," John whispered. "Ma won't

"Oh, I think she will!" The man

spoke softly in the mother's ear. "Nothing could please me more," John heard her say.

The man took him by the hand and led him from the pew. They did not leave the church, but by one of those miracles which dreams perform John found himself seated beside the man upon the cool, grassy bank of a beautiful stream. The sanguine predictions made by American yachtsmen earlier in the season were well based. Developments to date in yachting circles are of a nature that cannot but presage a record breaking summer in this one of the most attractive sports.

The eastern schedules have all been announced, and an imposing array of regattas has been prepared. The most important of the eastern races are naturally the contests for the America's cup. The New York Yacht club has given out the official dates for the international races as Aug. 20, 22, 24, 27, 29. Additional dates for postponed races in the America's cup series will be announced later.

The western sailors are determined not to be outdone this year. The Pacific coast is more interested in aquatics now than it has been for many years past.

San Francisco yachtsmen have built several new and speedy craft that compare favorably with any in the east.

All along the great lakes yacht clubs are in their glory. In and about Chicago the enthusiasts are paying a deal of attention to the Illinois, the splen-

The sanguine predictions made by American yachtsmen earlier in the season were well based. Developments to date in yachting circles are of a nature that cannot but presage a record breaking summer in this one of the most attractive sports.

The eastern schedules have all been announced, and an imposing array of regattas has been prepared. The most important of the eastern races are naturally the contests for the America's cup. The New York Yacht club has given out the official dates for the international races as Aug. 20, 22, 24, 27, 29. Additional dates for postponed races in the America's cup series will be announced later.

The western sailors are determined not to be outdone this year. The Pacific coast is more interested in aquatics now than it has been for many vears past.

San Francisco yachtsmen have built several new and speedy craft that compare favorably with any in the east.

All along the great lakes yacht clubs are in their glory. In and about Chicago the enthusiasts are paying a deal of attention to the Illinois, the splen-

NOTED CLASSIC RACE

Historic Brooklyn Handicap at Gravesend, N. Y., May 25.

ENTRIES, WEIGHTS AND JOCKEYS.

Kinley Mack and Ethelbert Carry Highest Impost-Why a Three-yearold Will Have Difficulty In Winning the Big Purse.

The famous Brooklyn Handicap will be run May 25 at Gravesend, N. Y. This race is one of the most important events of the running turf in the east. Although the stakes in other races may be higher and the entries more numerous, the Brooklyn Handicap has held the patronage of the public since the day in 1887 when the first of the series was won by Dry Monopole in the fast time of 2:07.

The entries for the handicap this year are of a very high order. Ethelbert. the spirited Eothen horse, and Kinley Mack, winner last season of both the are plainly the class of the race. Mc-Meekin, Banastar, who recently won in the Metropolitan Handicap at Morris however, will make a bold fight for the money.

The usual gossip to the effect that one of the 3-year-olds will win the Brooklyn has been going the rounds. The indulgence in such talk, however, is manifestly a waste of time, judging ing a kitchen garden, it was most apfrom the lessons of precedents. 3-year-old has never yet landed first money in the Brooklyn and probably just outside each window sill, and, in never will. Endurance and experience are prime factors in deciding this race. Older horses consequently have much in their favor.

As was to be expected, the handicapper has awarded Kinley Mack top weight, 128 pounds, and Ethelbert the second highest, 126 pounds. Banastar's him the choice of many for first place in the Brooklyn. He will run well unless his noteworthy ugly temper gets the control over him.

Charentas, with 107 pounds, and Brigadier, carrying 104, should do well. Reports from their respective stables state that they are in prime condition.

There have been fears expressed in many quarters that the presence of a number of the leading American jockeys in England would injure the big races in this country this year, but there are no grounds for such ideas. There are good riders a-plenty on this side of the pond, and the Brooklyn Handicap entrants will receive the best of piloting. Tommy Burns, Bullman, Odom, Spencer, who was recently reinstated by the Brooklyn Jockey club; Mounce, Winnie O'Connor, McCue, Henry, Slack, Mitchell and Shaw are some of the well known riders now in the east. Most of these men will have mounts in the Brooklyn. Here is the list of entries for the Brooklyn Handicap and their weights:

THE KITCHEN GARDEN. How Even the City Woman May Have Hers-In a Box.

Last summer I visited two gardens, and I don't know which one gave the more pleasure to its owner. The first was situated beyond the city limits, Park, N. Y.; Ildrim, and Charentus, where land was cheap and plenty. It was a small kingdom in itself and contained every vegetable known to that section of the country.

The other garden was in a flat. A flat! I hear you exclaim. Yes, and it was not even in the back yard; but, bepropriately placed in the kitchen. Long boxes lined with zinc were fastened addition, brackets, which supported pots, were nailed to the sides. These were filled with tender growing things. In one box were globe radishes, in another lettuce, and a third, placed in the pantry window, held little onions. The flowerpots were filled with fragrant herbs for soups and flavorings. "You victory in the Metropolitan has made can't imagine what a comfort our hanging garden has been to Tom and me," the owner said. "It almost makes us forget we are imprisoned in this hot city. And then, too, you should taste our radishes and lettuce. So different from those which have been standing for hours in the market! Next year I am going to place boxes in all of our windows, and we will have in addition some cucumbers and small tomatoes. They only take four or five inches of soil, you know, and the cucumbers trail most artistically over the edges of the boxes.'

Why don't other women try the experiment? Besides the vegetables mentioned, a number of herbs can be grown, such as parsley, thyme, savory, chives and marjoram. It is only a question of well fertilized soil, good seed and deep boxes. For the rest these green things are much less trouble to raise than flowers and far more fasci-HELEN CLIFTON.

CHILDREN'S, PLAY HOURS. Modern Instructive Games and the Evil of Overdoing Them.

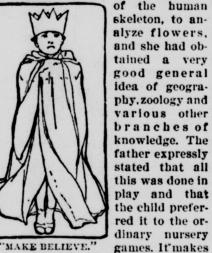

N the old days before the spirit of kindergarten reigned over the land a child's play hours were its own. Wrapped in a scarlet tablecloth and crowned with a gorgeous gilt paper circlet, the small boy could fancy himself a king and the small girl, muffled in borrowed fineries, a beautiful princess.

But, alas, such foolish triflings are displeasing to the spirit of kindergarten. The child must learn, must absorb knowledge unconsciously and continually; hence the scientific toys, the instructive games and the educational puzzles that flood the market. There is even an attempt to make the study of mathematics and languages appear like a game to the luckless baby whose brain is to be crammed with them.

A short time ago The Strand Magazine gave an example of this sort.

According to the narrator, who is the infant's adopted father, a little girl 3 years old had learned in the guise of play to translate French and German into English and to read all three languages, to read numbers as large as octillions, to draw almost any geometrical form, to name all the bones of the human games. It makes one wonder whether the poor little mite ever knew the joy of a careless romp in the sunshine or indeed whether there was time for any such thing in the father's elaborate scheme of education.

Knowledge is all very well, but it s the most foolish thing in the world to forget that a healthy body is a hild's best equipment for the battle of life, for a healthy body usually carries with it a good heart and a healthy brain. MAUD ROBINSON.

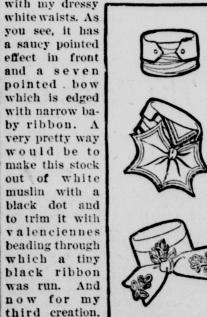

WORK FOR A RAINY DAY.

The Clever Woman Makes All Her Fancy Stocks and Saves Money.

"You say that my neckwear alway looks so fresh and dainty," said the clever woman. "Here is my secret." And she shook out of a bag a pile of dress remnants and bits of lace and muslin. "I make all my own stocks, and as they are almost all evolved out of remnants and odd pieces I save a pretty penny, and consequently I can afford to have a great variety. Let me show you the pretty ones I am making for summer wear. One needs so many, you know, and a dainty bit of muslin about one's throat will make even a The clever woman's friend saw the

This one is of plain, unstarched pique, with little gold studs, but I am making two more, one of hemstitched grass linen and the other of pale blue chambray, to wear over a white ribbon, with a pale blue waist. Do you notice the buttonholes through the collar itself, the ribbon and the foundation band? This arrangement enables you to wear jeweled studs of different colors to match your shirt waists. The second collar is made of white taffeta, although it could be carried out equally well in white muslin. It is to wear with my dressy

Historic Brooklyn Handicap at Gravesend, N. Y., May 25.

ENTRIES, WEIGHTS AND JOCKEYS.

Kinley Mack and Ethelbert Carry Highest Impost-Why a Three-yearold Will Have Difficulty In Winning the Big Purse.

The famous Brooklyn Handicap will be run May 25 at Gravesend, N. Y. This race is one of the most important events of the running turf in the east. Although the stakes in other races may be higher and the entries more numerous, the Brooklyn Handicap has held the patronage of the public since the day in 1887 when the first of the series was won by Dry Monopole in the fast time of 2:07.

The entries for the handicap this year are of a very high order. Ethelbert, the spirited Eothen horse, and Kinley making a bushing for a cog wheel Mack, winner last season of both the Brooklyn and the Suburban Handicaps, are plainly the class of the race. Mc-Meekin, Banastar, who recently won in the Metropolitan Handicap at Morris Park, N. Y.; Ildrim, and Charentus, however, will make a bold fight for the

> The usual gossip to the effect that one of the 3-year-olds will win the Brooklyn has been going the rounds. The indulgence in such talk, however, is manifestly a waste of time, judging lng a kitchen garden, it was most apfrom the lessons of precedents. A 3-year-old has never yet landed first money in the Brooklyn and probably just outside each window sill, and, in never will. Endurance and experience are prime factors in deciding this race. Dots, were nailed to the sides. These Older horses consequently have much in their favor.

As was to be expected, the handicapper has awarded Kinley Mack top weight, 128 pounds, and Ethelbert the second highest, 126 pounds. Banastar's victory in the Metropolitan has made him the choice of many for first place in the Brooklyn. He will run well unless his noteworthy ugly temper gets the control over him.

Charentas, with 107 pounds, and Brigadier, carrying 104, should do well. Reports from their respective stables state that they are in prime condition.

There have been fears expressed in many quarters that the presence of a number of the leading American jockeys in England would injure the big races in this country this year, but there are no grounds for such ideas. There are good riders a-plenty on this side of the pond, and the Brooklyn Handicap entrants will receive the best of piloting. Tommy Burns, Bullman, Odom, Spencer, who was recently reinstated by the Brooklyn Jockey club; Mounce, Winnie O'Connor, McCue, Henry, Slack, Mitchell and Shaw are some of the well known riders now in the east. Most of these men will have mounts in the Brooklyn.

Here is the list of entries for the

VALLEY FORGE, SITE OF OLD FORT WASHINGTON, BUILT

THE KITCHEN GARDEN. How Even the City Woman May Have Hers-In a Box.

Last summer I visited two gardens. and I don't know which one gave the more pleasure to its owner. The first was situated beyond the city limits, where land was cheap and plenty. It was a small kingdom in itself and contained every vegetable known to that section of the country.

The other garden was in a flat. A flat! I hear you exclaim. Yes, and it was not even in the back yard; but, bepropriately placed in the kitchen. Long boxes lined with zinc were fastened addition, brackets, which supported were filled with tender growing things. In one box were globe radishes, in another lettuce, and a third, placed in the pantry window, held little onions. The flowerpots were filled with fragrant herbs for soups and flavorings. "You can't imagine what a comfort our hanging garden has been to Tom and me," the owner said. "It almost makes us forget we are imprisoned in this hot city. And then, too, you should taste our radishes and lettuce. So different from those which have been standing for hours in the market! Next year I am going to place boxes in all of our windows, and we will have in addition some cucumbers and small tomatoes. They only take four or five inches of soil, you know, and the cucumbers trail most artistically over the edges of the boxes."

Why don't other women try the experiment? Besides the vegetables mentioned, a number of herbs can be grown, such as parsley, thyme, savory, chives and marjoram. It is only a question of well fertilized soil, good seed and deep boxes. For the rest these green things are much less trouble to raise than flowers and far more fasci-HELEN CLIFTON.

CHILDREN'S, PLAY HOURS.

Modern Instructive Games and the Evil of Overdoing Them.

N the old days before the spirit of kindergarten reigned over the land a child's play hours were its own. Wrapped in a scarlet tablecloth and crowned with a gorgeous gilt paper circlet, the small boy could fancy himself a king and the small girl, muffled in borrowed fineries, a beautiful princess. But, alas, such foolish triflings are displeasing to the spirit of kindergarten. The child must learn, must absorb knowledge unconsciously and continually; hence the scientific toys, the instructive games and the educational puzzles that flood the market. There is even an attempt to make the study of mathematics and languages appear like a game to the luckless baby whose brain is to be crammed with them.

A short time ago The Strand Magazine gave an example of this sort.

According to the narrator, who is the infant's adopted father, a little girl 3 years old had learned in the guise of play to translate French and German into English and to read all three languages, to read numbers as large as octillions, to draw almost any geometrical form, to name all the bones of the human skeleton, to analyze flowers, and she had obtained a very good general idea of geography, zoology and various other branches of knowledge. The father expressly stated that all this was done in play and that the child preferred it to the ordinary nursery

"MAKE BELIEVE." games. It makes one wonder whether the poor little mite ever knew the joy of a careless romp in the sunshine or indeed whether there was time for any such thing in the father's elaborate scheme of education.

Knowledge is all very well, but it s the most foolish thing in the world o forget that a healthy body is a hild's best equipment for the battle of life, for a healthy body usually carries with it a good heart and a healthy MAUD ROBINSON.

WORK FOR A RAINY DAY.

The Clever Woman Makes All Her

Fancy Stocks and Saves Money. "You say that my neckwear always looks so fresh and dainty," said the clever woman. "Here is my secret." And she shook out of a bag a pile of dress remnants and bits of lace and muslin. "I make all my own stocks, and as they are almost all evolved out of remnants and odd pieces I save a pretty penny, and consequently I can afford to have a great variety. Let me show you the pretty ones I am making for summer wear. One needs so many, you know, and a dainty bit of muslin about one's throat will make even a year before last shirt waist look new.' The clever woman's friend saw the three collars in the illustration.

"The collar, which buttons so daintily over its ribbon foundation, is to wear with gingham shirt waists. This one is of plain, unstarched pique, with little gold studs, but I am making two more, one of hemstitched grass linen and the other of pale blue chambray, to wear over a white ribbon, with a pale blue waist. Do you notice the buttonholes through the collar itself, the ribbon and the foundation band? This arrangement enables you to wear jeweled studs of different colors to match your shirt waists. The second 11/a12c per pound. collar is made of white taffeta, although it could be carried out equally well in white muslin. It is to wear with my dressy white waists. As you see, it has a saucy pointed effect in front and a seven pointed . bow which is edged with narrow baby ribbon. A very pretty way would be to make this stock out of white muslin with a black dot and to trim it with valenciennes beading through which a tiny black ribbon was run. And now for my third creation.

This is to wear with silk and THREE NEW COLLARS. flannel waists. It is made of liberty satin ribbon. I have two like it, one black, with three ecru applique figures, and the other white, with black chantilly lace figures. Of course the bow is a 'made' one, and the collar fastens down the back in the ordinary way. So, you see," she concluded, with a smile, "I have a collar for every occasion."

The justice was at first unable to determine what course to pursue in carrying out the request made of him. but he asked the couple to sit down and explain their grievances. The husband stated he had come to the conclusion, after thorough deliberation, that his wife was no match for him, and that he had made a fool of himself when he got married.

At a request from the 'squire to state his reasons, the husband said his wife had refused to darn his socks and patch his trousers. She wouldn't allow him to raise chickens, he said, and she couldn't make good gravy. Mrs. Williams then told her troubles. She said her husband was fickle and didn't know a good thing when he had it. She further stated that he accused her of having other "mashes," which was false. The woman admitted she could not please him, but said he was too fastidious to suit her. She said she is going to Cincinnati, where she expects to join a circus and do never rallied after his injury. IN WILD MONTANA.

A Resident of That State Relates an Adventure.

"I suppose things are still pretty wild out your way?" he queried of the man who had admitted that he was from Montana.

"Well, yes, you might call them wild," was the reply.

"And every day brings its thrilling adventure?"

"One has an adventure now and then, of course, as might be expected." "Anything thrilling happened to you of late?" persisted the questioner.

"Why, I don't know that you'd call it thrilling exactly. I sat in my library a few evenings ago reading Shakespeare, while my wife was playing on the piano in the parlor and my little daughter was in the conservatory gathering hothouse roses. All at once I heard a crash"-

"Injuns attacking the house, by George!" interrupted the other.

-"I heard a crash from the grand salon, and, carefully laying aside my book and walking in there with languid step, I found"-

"A grizzly bear, of course!" -"I found that one of my three old masters of Rubens had fallen down and knocked the nose off a piece of statuary which cost me $8,000 in Florence."

"And there were no Injuns?" "No."

"And no grizzly?" "No."

"Not even a rattlesnake?"

"No. It was simply the fall of a plcture and a broken nose. I called in the butler, the footman and a housemaid, and the debris was soon cleared ed away."

"And you - you" - stammered the man who had been waiting to thrill.

"Nothing more, except that a carload of tapestries and foreign bric-a-brac arrived an hour later, and a few friends came in to sample some French wine at $7 per bottle. Yes, things are pretty wild out our way, but we manage to pull along somehow." M. QUAD

Edward Had a Very Close Call on the New Yacht.

THE BOAT QUICKLY DISMASSED

Sir Thomas Lipton Hopes the New York Yacht Club Will Give Him More Time-Members Likely to Grant It, When He Asks.

London, May 23.—The escape of King Edward during the dismasting of the Snamrock II was narrower than at first supposed. The heavy steel bocm of the chalwas just swinging aboard when the catastrophe occurred. Had the break come a lew seconds later boom would have been right over the deck, and it is impossible to estimate what damage might have been As it was, all the gear fell clear of the yacnt, the end of the boom being just clear of her port

King Congratulated on Escape.

The king arrived in London about midnight. He drove to Mariborough house, where he was cheered by a crowd awaiting his arrival. Numerous telegrams were awaiting him from Emperor William, the crowned heads of Europe and others, congratulating him on his escape. Southampton, May 23.—A written statement made last night by Sir Thomas Lipton to a representative of the Associated Press was as follows:

'My deepest regret is that today's accident prevents me from toeing the mark at the appointed hour and compels me to ask the New York Yacht club to grant me an extension of time. If they will be good enough to do that I shall race, even if I have to build a boat between now and the date agreed upon. I still believe the Shamrock II a boat worthy to be the challenger, and that, when this unfortunate chapter of accidents comes to an end, she will still stand a good chance of lifting the cup. I have not a single complaint to make against

"For the many telegrams of sympathy received from America today am deeply grateful. No one is more thankful than I am that the catastrophe ended without fatality, and I may perhaps say that throughout the trying moments his majesty was as brave as a lion. His first thought was to inquire if anyone was in-

"Thomas Lipton." Circumstances have reduced the Shamrock II to a pitiful sparless wreck. She now lies off Hythe. The story of the catastrophe is best told by Sir Thomas Lipton himself. After seeing his royal guest off to London, Sir Thomas gave the following interview to a representative of the Asso-clated Press last night: Lipton Described the Accident.

We had just begun to make for the starting line when a fierce breeze sprang up. King Edward, Lady Londonderry, Mrs. Jameson, Mr. Watson, Mr. Jameson and myself were on deck, hanging on as best we might, for the challenger was almost at an angle of 45 degrees. The king started to go below. Just as he did so everything collapsed. A heavy block fell between the two ladies and a wire rope struck me on the head and momentarily stunned me. A sudden squall, an unexpected strain, and everything had given way. King Edward was half in and half out of the companion hatchway. pened, how all the falling spars and What hapsweeping sails did not kill or sweep some one overboard, is more than 1 know. The representative of the Associated Press further learned that Sir Thomas' first utterance, on coming to, was this ardent adjuration to Mr.

Telegraph for more spars. We have got to sail on August 12, and this boat has got to do it." When the distinguished participators in the mishap had been safely transferred to the Erin, the king's first remark was: "When shall we sail again, Lipton?" and before his majesty started for London his last words to Sir

Thomas were:

King Said He Would Go Again. When you next sail I am going

In fact, the ruler of the British empire seemed keenly to enjoy the unusual spice of danger into which his love of sport had led him.

Mr. Watson and Mr. Jameson, especially the former, are very downeast, and absolutely refuse to say anything. Mr. Watson, indeed, is so chagrined that he could scarcely talk to even his most intimate friends, and until after dinner, on board the Erin. Sir Thomas believed it would be im-Possible to contest for the cup this fear. Heartfelt expressions of gratitude all sides. Many people say he was foolish to go aboard the challenger, but, as Sir Thomas says: "If I did safe, you may be sure I would never have invited his majesty.

The president was met at the pavilion by a procesvery sion of 1,500 Sir Knights from this building, where 12,000 people had already assembled. General W. H. Barnes introduced President McKinley. Following this introductory address a choir of 150 voices sang "The Templars' Prayer," with the accompaniment of a band of 60 pieces, and the effect was most impressive. Train Ran Away Down Mountain, Near Altoona, Pa.

Altoona, Pa., May 23 .- A train crew lost control of 43 cars of coal just after leaving the Gallitzin tunnel, and, starting down the eastern slope, the cars shot down the mountain at about a mile-a-minute speed. Two empty engines in charge of John Riley and J. F. McNulty, of this city. were standing at McGarvey, near the end of the grade. These men heard the distress signals and quickly arranged to assist in stopping the train. They ran ahead, but were taken by the runaway.

The combined efforts of the three MRS. M'KINLEY'S CONDITION IS engines finally brought the train to a standstill. Conductor John Early, of Pitcairn, was jolted from the train at Allegrippus while assisting his men to put on the brakes. He fell in front of Pacific express, a passenger train, and was cut in two. He was 38 years old and leaves a wife and children. Fireman Lingenfelter was on one of the empty engines. THIRD TERM TALK.

Senator Depew talks a good deal. A man cannot talk all the time without ator's prediction that President Mc-Kinley will be elected to a third term is not a reasonable one. Not that the president could not be re-elected if nominated, or that he could not be renominated, if he wanted to be; but because he is not the man to think of setting aside a precedent which has never been violated since the foundation of the republic. The new scheme which has been unfolded to Mr. Nice is to induce council at the To the Voice of East Liverpool next meeting of that body to provide legislation whereby the office of dog catcher will be created.

This idea has been talked over for several days by the authorities at the city hall and has met with unanimous approval. It has been suggested that he use a bludgeon and beat their brains out, but this he also objects to. Drowning is favored, but Mr. Aufderheide says it is inhuman to take even a dog's life in the river water and that it's too expensive to use spring water. The result of this has been that several of No End" Solomon the salesmen have compared notes and found that a number of them have been victimized. The story, as told by the latest victim, is in substance as follows:

"You see, it is always customary for a salesman to get acquainted with McBurney all the employes of a store, and this particular individual has profited to a considerable extent by reason of the fact. "The other day, while showing my line at the store, I was approached by the man and asked if I did not want to purchase a recipe for making a particularly fine variety of sweet cakes. He said it was the sort his mother used to make and he knew they were all right.

"I had about as much use for a cake receipt as I had for a threshing machine, and told him so. He said I'd better buy, as he could do me lots of good with the firm. I still insisted that I did not want it, and he finally informed me that unless I paid $1 for the thing he would 'plug' against me with the proprietors of the firm. Of course I bought it. It wasn't business to do anything else. I learned afterward that it was an old trick, and that traveling men had been forced to buy all sorts of stuff from a patent terminator."

Perhaps one of the queerest bets ever made in this city was made by

Nick Flesch and Thomas Harley, two well known potters last Saturday week. Flesch had purchased a pair of socks for 25 cents and Harley bet him 50 cents that they would be full of holes inside of a week provided he wore them all the time. The wager was taken and on Friday night while they were at Turner hall it was discovered that there were holes in the socks, and the judge, Ed Morgan, decided the bet in Harley's favor, but

The fact of such an account being published of one living in almost the same place had a tendency to convince me that there must be some truth in it, and I determined to try them myself. Some years before tism; for three months I lav helpless and after that I had trouble with my kidneys. For a year I suffered verely. My back was so bad that it felt as if I had a boil where the kidneys are. I could not bend, lean back against a chair or reach up. I could not lie on my back, and about every move I made caused pain. I had taken numerous remedies, but none brought the desired relief. Well, Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the W. & W. pharmacy, did what no other remedy was able to do. I took them regularly for a short time and found them all the Pittsburg paper stated them to be. I can heartily recommend them. After using them I was rid of backaches and other symptoms of kidney trouble."

MOVEMENT IN ERIE

It Saved Stock Market From Semi-Stagnation-Some of the Market Features.

New York May 23 .- The stock market fell still further into apathy Lewis G. Bernard, McLean's chief Wednesday and was only relieved ment in the Erie stocks. The professional traders, at a loss to secure even a fractional profit on a turn in the market, flocked to the Erie crowd as the movement progressed and added their speculative operations to the other buying of the stock. The opinion, however, gained force on the exchange that the movement marked a resumption of operations for the extension of influence and control of ex was attributed to Wabash interests. and there were sundry circumstances which offered some corroboration. Statements were published Wednesday morning to the effect that a controlling interest had been secured in Lackawanna in order to afford an outlet to the seaboard for the Wabash and the Gould Southwestern system. it has been stated with particularity for several days past that the buying of Toledo, St. Louis and Western stocks was for Vanderbilt account, and it was claimed Wednesday that control had passed. The strength of Chicago, indianapolis and Louisville and of the Chicago Great Western stocks may have had a bearing on the same problem. The strength of the bituminous coal carrying roads was directly attributable to the declaration after a dividend of 11/2 per cent on the common stock of Hocking Valley, the first in its history. Wheeling and Lake Erie stocks, Nor folk and Western and Chesapeake and Ohio all moved upward in sym pathy. The strength of the Reading was called in sympathy with Erie in lange. Every shade of blue was repreits character as an anthracite carrier but Erie was the only one of the group to maintain its advance. This stock closed at the highest at a gain of 234. Some of the individual blocks purchased ran as high as 6,000 shares. A feature of the day was a sale of Northern Pacific at 171, compared with 1561/2 Tuesday night, but the stock dropped back again to 160. An unpleasant impression was produced by a suggestion that the authorities of the London stock exchange would rescind the suspension of rules for buying in Northern Pacific stock against the shorts.

This suggestion and the announcement of $500,000 exported gold had a part in the early heaviness of the market. The fact that there were no additional gold engagements, contrary to expectation, may have had some influence in the later hardening of prices, but the vigorous advance in Erie was the main factor. President Desires the Powers' Demands Moderated.

San Francisco, May 23.-President McKinley and Secretary of State Hay have been in communication with Washington during their journey west. Dispatches from foreign embassies have been arriving and the Chinese situation has received special attention. The president has been anxious lest the difficulties thrown in the way of an arrangement by the demands of some of the powers might lead to indefinite delay and a consequent increase of the indemnity to be exacted. The points to be settled are, first, the total amount of the indemnity and the share of each power; second, the method of payment.

John Haddon sat with his face between his hands, looking into the dying fire through a ragged wound in the side of his rusty stove. A chill wind wailed dismally over the top of the crumbling chimney. A loose clapboard rapped against the side of the house with a hollow, uncanny night sound. The desolation of his surroundings harmonized with John's mood, so that when a swaying tree grated against the eaves with a groan like that of a tormented soul it almost pleased him.

told of a coming storm. John stepped to the window and peered out. Heavy clouds were rushing across the face of the wasting moon. The wind hissed over the jagged edge of a broken pane and a few great drops were blown against the glass. Then as a quivering flare of lightning gilded the slender white spire of the little church across the way John uttered a grunt of disgust and returned to his seat by the stove, for whatever stood for Christianity was a thorn in his flesh.

John Haddon was not an unlearned man. In his boyhood his sternly pious parents had fondly hoped that he might some day be a great preacher of the gospel to which their faith was riveted. Accordingly they had held him firmly to the strictest discipline of the church and had provided him with such knowledge as seemed necessary to a successful pulpit career. But when death had removed these directing hands John had turned from the church to the groggery, and his rapid passage through the several degrees of sociability, conviviality and debauchery had been marked by an ever increasing hatred of the religion with which his boyhood had been gorged. At the tavern where he and his cronies passed most of their time the mere mention of religion was enough to draw from him a violent storm of abuse of the church and all professing believers. So intent was he on exposing what he called the narrow bigotry of the Christians that he never even thought of concealing his own.

On this Saturday night the choir, which had been augmented by many children's voices for the morrow's Easter service, was having its last rehearsal in the little church. Now and then the swelling volume of the chorus reached John's ear.

"Nonsense!" he muttered, and his mind went off on its favorite theme. Bigoted as he was, it delighted him to think that the Christian religion was absurd; that it contained all the impossibilities of other religions and many more besides; that its founder creatures, and that its Scriptures fell to ashes of fiction whenever the light of reason was turned on them.

As he sat by his stove nursing these hateful thoughts the doors of the church were opened and a flock of children stood in the light, looking out in dismay on the driving storm. At sight of this John grinned-the same misanthropic grin that had darkened his face when lightning the summer before had torn the steeple of the church and spared his own house across the way-"the house of the wicked heretic," as he significantly called it.

How long he sat thus gloating over the discomfiture of the storm's prisoners he could not have told. A sense of frowsiness came over him, and he sprawled back in the comfortable old rocker which had been his mother's favorite chair. Then the familiar air of "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," came floating to him from the church, and as his thought faded, faded into dreams, he tried in his mind to keep time to the melody with the sacrilegious words of a pothouse parody.

The storm had ceased. The wind had sung itself to sleep. The little church stood silent in the darkness, its shadowy spire pointing heavenward like a ghostly finger. The last smoldering ember in the stove burst into lurid, doubtful life, cast a wan ray across the sleeping man's dark face, then gasped and died. John Haddon dreamed.

He thought he was a boy again, sitting in the hot, high back pew beside his mother. The preacher, in his stiff white stock, stood canting in the pulpit. John looked at a spider working-A faint flickering in the west and actually working on the Lord's day-in the gruff rumbling of distant thunder a corner of the window, and his mother shook him by the arm, bidding him keep his eyes on the preacher. Then came the prayer, and John must kneel upon the hard, bare floor and bow his head and close his eyes and think of what the preacher said when not a word of it meant anything to him.

As he knelt there a hand was gently laid upon his head, and, turning, he beheld a man standing beside him. His mother's eyes were closed in prayer. She did not see the man.

"You don't like this kind of thing, do you?" the man whispered in his ear.

John shook his head for reply. "Let us go away from here, then," said the man.

"I can't," John whispered. "Ma won't

"Oh, I think she will!" The man

spoke softly in the mother's ear. "Nothing could please me more," John heard her say.

The man took him by the hand and led him from the pew. They did not leave the church, but by one of those miracles which dreams perform John found himself seated beside the man upon the cool, grassy bank of a beautiful stream. A generous old oak wrapped them in grateful shadows and harbored among its leaves innumerable birds that drank the summer sunshine and distilled it into song. Flowers nodded to the passing waters and flung their fragrance to the romping breezes. The whole world seemed full of gladness.

"You like this better than the church?" the man asked.

"Yes; I don't like the church," John answered.

"What do you dislike about it?" "Oh, everything, especially the old preacher.' "When you were ill, did he not bring fresh herbs to make you well?" John hung his head. He had forgot-

"And he never told you that he walked miles and miles, feeble as he was, to find those herbs."

The man laid his arm affectionately across John's shoulder. "No, my dear Was the most fabulous of all fabled boy; it is not the church nor yet the STOOPED AND KISSED HIM ON THE CHEEK. preacher that you hate. It is the harsh, the gold of morning through the winunforgiving spirit of the world that has crept into the church."

"Are you a Christian?" John asked. "I am afraid I should have a hard time getting into some of the churches. I could not subscribe to all their doctrines. But if to love God and all his creatures be enough I think I may say I am of that religion.'

"If all Christians were like that, I would be one, too," said John.

"Perhaps if you were to cast some of gentle, careworn face?" the malice out of your heart you would right? Do you always do so?"

"N-no," John confessed, "I don't." "Then should you blame others for doing no worse?"

"No," said John frankly; "that isn't fair, is it?"

"No more is it fair to judge men by their faults only. You do not like the preacher's glum severity. Neither do You do not like his doctrine of page and glistened there. God's cruelty. Neither do I. But shall we let these petty things overweigh all his goodnesses?" The man took a nut from the ground. "Shall we eat but the shuck and say the nut is bitter and bad?

"If you were a preacher, I would be glad to go to church every Sunday," said John, nestling closer to the man.

"I am a preacher." "Where is your church?"

"I have no church. I preach in the woods, in the streets, wherever I happen to be. I am preaching now to you."

"I like you," said John, looking up at him with the charming candor of and angrily said: honest boyhood. "My folks want to make a preacher of me, but they teach me only out of dull books. Do you know catechisms?"

"You don't! The book of faith?" "I never heard of it."

John was amazed. "What is your denomination?" he asked.

"I have none." "But you believe in the Bible, don't

"I don't know. I never saw it."

"Haven't you any doctrine at all?" "Oh, yes," the man answered. "I breach the doctrine of love and charity and forgiveness and hope. I tell people to hate sin and love the sinner. I try to make them see the glory of God in his wondrous works."

Suddenly the dream scene shifted. John Haddon seemed to be a man seated in the tavern, drinking and singing ribald songs with his cronies. In the midst of the revel a soiled and weary looking traveler entered and, passing quietly behind John's chair, stooped and kissed him on the cheek. With an oath John sprang to his feet and struck the stranger.

"Am I so soon forgotten?" the man asked sadly, though with no resent-

Through fumes of liquor and clouds of tobacco smoke which dimmed his brain and vision John vaguely recognized the traveler as the man with whom, ages and ages before, he had sat upon the grassy bank. Before he could speak the apology which trembled on his lips one of his cronies dashed the contents of a glass in the stranger's face. John raised a chair above his head.

"This is my friend," he cried, "and I will brain the man who insults him!" "Peace, peace!" said the stranger quietly. "These, too, are my friends. We are all brothers."

In shame John Haddon sank to his knees and buried his face in the folds of the traveler's dusty robe.

"Come!" The man raised John. "I have a great pleasure for you-and for you and you," he added, turning to the Silently he led them down a dirty alley and up a tottering stairway to a miserable room where, on a pile of stained straw, a woman lay, pale and gaunt, with a starving babe vainly seeking life upon her wasted breast. The cronies looked at one another as if to ask what pleasure any one could find in such a place. The stranger knelt beside the dying woman.

"Brothers," said he, "here is our sister starving amid plenty."

Many cannon balls and old muskets have been taken out, and several cannons were also found. It is uncertain as yet whether the boats belonged to the Americans or the Brit ish. CREED REVISION.

LEADING ISSUE IN PRESBY. TERIAN ASSEMBLY.

Almost Every Speaker Mentioned the Subject-Missionaries

Defended.

Philadelphia, May 23.-That creed revision is the leading issue of the Presbyterian general assembly was strongly evidenced during the day's sessions Wednesday, when almost every speaker took occasion to mention the subject during the course of his address. Shortly before adjournment Rev. Dr. Richard S. Holmes, of Pittsburg, started the commissioners by launching into a discussion of the question, but when he stopped long enough to announce that he was simply leading up to a point in connecion with his appeal for assistance in removing the mortgage from the New York Presbyterian building no objection was offered. A motion was made to hold the meetings of the assembly during the debate on revision at the Academy of Music, but was not acted upon, as the order of the day took precedence.

The committee on church policy presented a report containing numerous decisions on overtures submitted by various presbyteries. A factional Covenant, at Williamsport, Pa., which had been referred to the judicial committee, was ordered tried according to the provisions of the Book of Discipline. In a stirring address Rebert E. Speer, of New York, secretary of the board of foreign missions, defended the missionaries against the 'malignant and venomous criticism' which he said they had suffered since the Boxer uprising in China.

In the early years of her married life the captain's affairs required him to be away from the river hill home most of the time.

Mrs. Flanegan was a college bred woman, but circumstances demanded that she should steep herself in agricultural lore-to be farmer while her husband was absent. Later it fell to her lot to take charge of her mother's estates, rural lands. She has done this so successfully that she is known as one of the best farmers in that part of beautiful southern Ohio.

Her first task was to put fences and farm buildings in thorough repair, to clear up villainous briers and undergrowth and to fill the gullies of the hill lands. These preliminaries took all the profits of Mrs. Flanegan's first years of farming, but she persevered. The next thing was to make the land pay her mother a per cent of profit in these bad times for agriculture-times when farm men and boys are walking away and letting their rooftrees fall in and their lands go back to the desolation of wilderness because they cannot make farming pay.

Mrs. Flanegan held the levers of things in her own hands and worked them. She is a woman of remarkable physical strength and perfect health.

Her pride is perhaps in her cows, mostly of Jersey blood. She has learned how to make farm butter that city folk will not sniff at and turn away from. It is a cold, sorry fact that hardly one farm woman in ten can do that. None of Mrs. Flanegan's butter is ever sold for rancid grease at 5 cents a pound, to be turned into a boiling vat and done over with fresh buttermilk to make it salable at all. Her butter is engaged by one purchaser, who pays top price the year round, and if she had four times as much she could dispose of it at the same rate. She has no more than four or five cows,

NOTED CLASSIC RACE

Historic Brooklyn Handicap at Gravesend, N. Y., May 25.

ENTRIES, WEIGHTS AND JOCKEYS.

Kinley Mack and Ethelbert Carry Highest Impost-Why a Three-yearold Will Have Difficulty In Winning the Big Purse.

The famous Brooklyn Handicap will be run May 25 at Gravesend, N. Y. This race is one of the most important events of the running turf in the east. Although the stakes in other races may be higher and the entries more numerous, the Brooklyn Handicap has held the patronage of the public since the day in 1887 when the first of the series was won by Dry Monopole in the fast time of 2:07. The entries for the handicap this year are of a very high order. Ethelbert, the spirited Eothen horse, and Kinley How Even the City Woman May Meekin, Banastar, who recently won in the Metropolitan Handicap at Morris Park, N. Y.; Ildrim, and Charentus,

The usual gossip to the effect that one of the 3-year-olds will win the Brooklyn has been going the rounds. The indulgence in such talk, however, from the lessons of precedents. A 3-year-old has never yet landed first money in the Brooklyn and probably are prime factors in deciding this race. Older horses consequently have much in their favor.

As was to be expected, the handicapper has awarded Kinley Mack top pantry window, held little onions. The weight, 128 pounds, and Ethelbert the second highest, 126 pounds. Banastar's herbs for soups and flavorings. "You victory in the Metropolitan has made him the choice of many for first place in the Brooklyn. He will run weil unless his noteworthy ugly temper gets the control over him.

Charentas, with 107 pounds, and Brigadier, carrying 104, should do well. Reports from their respective stables state that they are in prime condition.

There have been fears expressed in many quarters that the presence of a number of the leading American jockeys in England would injure the big races in this country this year, but there are no grounds for such ideas. There are good riders a-plenty on this side of the pond, and the Brooklyn Handicap entrants will receive the best of piloting. Tommy Burns, Bullman, Odom, Spencer, who was recently reinstated by the Brooklyn Jockey club; Mounce, Winnie O'Connor, McCue, Henry, Slack, Mitchell and Shaw are some of the well known riders now in the east. Most of these men will have mounts in the Brooklyn.

Here is the list of entries for the Brooklyn Handicap and their weights: Weight. Weight.

THE KITCHEN GARDEN.

Have Hers-In a Box.

Last summer I visited two gardens, and I don't know which one gave the more pleasure to its owner. The first was situated beyond the city limits, where land was cheap and plenty. It was a small kingdom in itself and contained every vegetable known to that section of the country.

The other garden was in a flat. A flat! I hear you exclaim. Yes, and it was not even in the back yard; but, beis manifestly a waste of time, judging ling a kitchen garden, it was most appropriately placed in the kitchen. Long boxes lined with zinc were fastened just outside each window sill, and, in never will. Endurance and experience addition, brackets, which supported pots, were nailed to the sides. These were filled with tender growing things. In one box were globe radishes, in another lettuce, and a third, placed in the flowerpots were filled with fragrant can't imagine what a comfort our hanging garden has been to Tom and me," the owner said. "It almost makes us forget we are imprisoned in this hot city. And then, too, you should taste our radishes and lettuce. So different from those which have been standing for hours in the market! Next year I am going to place boxes in all of our windows, and we will have in addition some cucumbers and small tomatoes. They only take four or five inches of soil, you know, and the cucumbers trail most artistically over the edges of the boxes.'

Why don't other women try the experiment? Besides the vegetables mentioned, a number of herbs can be grown, such as parsley, thyme, savory, chives and marjoram. It is only a question of well fertilized soil, good seed and deep boxes. For the rest these green things are much less trouble to raise than flowers and far more fasci-HELEN CLIFTON.

CHILDREN'S, PLAY HOURS.

Modern Instructive Games and the Evil of Overdoing Them.

N the old days before the spirit of kindergarten reigned over the land a child's play hours were its own. Wrapped in a scarlet tablecloth and crowned with a gorgeous gilt paper circlet, the small boy could fancy himself a king and the small girl, muffled in borrowed fineries, a beautiful princess.

But, alas, such foolish triflings are displeasing to the spirit of kindergarten. The child must learn, must absorb knowledge unconsciously and continually; hence the scientific toys, the instructive games and the educational puzzles that flood the market. There is even an attempt to make the study of mathematics and languages appear like a game to the luckless baby whose brain is to be crammed with them.

A short time ago The Strand Magazine gave an example of this sort.

According to the narrator, who is the infant's adopted father, a little girl 3 years old had learned in the guise of play to translate French and German into English and to read all three languages, to read numbers as large as octillions, to draw almost any geometrical form, to name all the bones of the human
